Giardia is very common and widespread in New Zealand (and many other countries). Drinking contaminated water and/or eating contaminated food, can deliver it to you, as well as being in contact with infected animals or people that carry the parasite. If you are living in the same house or taking care of a person with Giardia, you are most likely to have it as well.

Swallowing water that contains giardia while you are swimming in lakes, rivers, streams, springs or ponds, or drinking water from roofs can deliver Giardia to you also.

Symptoms of Giardia infection are:

Diarrhoea (which is the most common symptoms of a Giardia infection), Flatulence, Greasy Stools, Stomach Cramps or Nausea. Most people have relatively mild symptoms and disease, but it can lead to chronic illness, lasting months, or even years. Some people experience no symptoms at all.

A broad-spectrum De-wormer is available for other Intestinal Parasites, as well as a Flukes remedy for Flat Worms.

If you are unsure whether you have an infestation of Giardia, you can book for the Gut Health Check for \$20 to find out.
